

Early Journal Content on JSTOR, Free to Anyone in the World

This article is one of nearly 500,000 scholarly works digitized and made freely available to everyone in the world by JSTOR.

Known as the Early Journal Content, this set of works include research articles, news, letters, and other writings published in more than 200 of the oldest leading academic journals. The works date from the mid-seventeenth to the early twentieth centuries.

We encourage people to read and share the Early Journal Content openly and to tell others that this resource exists. People may post this content online or redistribute in any way for non-commercial purposes.

Read more about Early Journal Content at <http://about.jstor.org/participate-jstor/individuals/early-journal-content>.

JSTOR is a digital library of academic journals, books, and primary source objects. JSTOR helps people discover, use, and build upon a wide range of content through a powerful research and teaching platform, and preserves this content for future generations. JSTOR is part of ITHAKA, a not-for-profit organization that also includes Ithaka S+R and Portico. For more information about JSTOR, please contact support@jstor.org.

plaint is made of courtesy or remissness at Washington. But the delay, said to be on account of the new treaty negotiations, is very trying to the missionaries and to all concerned.

EMPEROR WILLIAM IN ENGLAND.

Speaking of the magnificent reception given to the German Emperor the Philadelphia Bulletin well says:

"When the best epoch shall have fairly dawned, the leading governments of the civilized world will not welcome their guests with a display of destructive forces. If a flotilla be sent to greet an arriving sovereign, it will be representative of commerce, not of war. It will be made up of great passenger steamers, merchant vessels that carry to and fro the commerce of the world, and all the classes of ships and boats that work to make nations richer, not to make them poorer. If there must be a noisy salute, it will be made with something less murderous than thundering cannon. The principal actors in the pageant will be dressed in clothing suggestive of peace, not arms, and the whole display will be suggestive to the reflecting mind of the prosperity and happiness that comes from peace not of the misery that inevitably attends war."

Why will men pile up agony? Why constantly and uproariously call to mind scenes of heart-breaking cruelty? We never hear a salute but the guns of Gettysburg, the wounded; the dead; the devastation; the hot, black night after the battle; the gangrene; the mutilated corpses huddled by winrows into trenches;—all these rise like a miasmic vision as the cannon roar.

WARLIKE FITS.

When a nation suffers from a warlike fit it is not easily appeased until it has tasted blood.—London Christian Globe.

That is true and it is also true that training to conquer by killing brings on the "fit." The constant stimulus of any passion or appetite makes it morbidly intense. Drunkenness and lust are enormously increased by solicitation and gratification. Just so with revenge. Many a man "feeds fat his ancient grudge." Nations and races do the same. Hence the need of abstinence from the stimulus, the food. Indulgence is the sure road to subjection to any vile passion. Wars create wars. Nothing but exhaustion will stop a fight. Hence we protest against military excitements, boys' brigades, girls' drills in tactics. Hence our dread of armaments of which governments and nations are proud and of which they can boast as able to conquer all opponents. Give a bloodhound a taste of blood and he will kill a man to get more. The bloodhound instinct is in man. It is mercifully inoperative in most civilized men. It is comparatively weak. It is hidden away and covered over with desires less animal. The moral and spiritual nature often cloaks the hideous animalism. But pet and pat the brute in man; feed and fatten the lowest instinct and it will grow and grasp at dominion. It will swell and swagger. It will claim to be virtuous and perhaps subdue virtue as its slave. It will rebel against goodness and run riot in the soul like a mob in a city. Indeed a murdering mob, such as killed the negroes in New York in 1863, is only the union and embodiment of many men's passions. Such also is an army during a fight. It is worse than a pitiless, soulless machine. It is a depraved, demonized person, madly excited by the taste of blood and lust of conquest. "Avoid it, pass not near it. Turn from it and pass away." Only thus can the "body be brought under." 1 Cor. ix. 27. Only thus can bloodthirstiness be mastered and transmuted. Treat a nation as you would treat a man.

THE INTER-PARLIAMENTARY PEACE CONFERENCE AT ROME.

Mr. Philip Stanhope, M. P., has received a letter from Signor Bonghi, the President of the executive committee to which have been entrusted the arrangements in connection with the forthcoming Inter-Parliamentary Peace Conference. The present idea is that the gathering shall take place in Rome, November 3-8. Signor Bonghi states that the general committee, now in process of reconstitution, has been joined by about half the Members of the Italian Chamber, and that this number is expected to be considerably increased. Signor Villari, who was one of the Italian delegates in London last year, will not be able to act on the executive committee because he is now a member of the Cabinet. The executive committee, which consists of Signor Bonghi and fourteen other Italian Senators and members, are at present engaged in drafting resolutions to be submitted to the Conference. In view of the growing importance of the question, a motion will probably be brought forward making the general committee a permanent body. Signor Bonghi is also the President of the Committee for organizing the Peace Congress at Rome, which will be held just after the Conference.—Herald of Peace.

INTERNATIONAL PEACE CONGRESS.

The preliminary conference of the International Peace Congress was opened in Milan May 30. A large number of delegates from Italian municipal counties were present. Deputies Maffi and Pandolfini were chosen as president and vice-president respectively. An invitation from the American Peace Society to hold an international congress in Chicago during the Exposition in that city was accepted.

J. B. Wood gives an amusing account in the Arbitrator of an Italian young lady whom he met in Rome, and who was so sea-sick from New York to Naples as to feel, on landing, "All alone in the world;" the three weeks of ocean nausea having "bereft her of herself." She could understand English, and was restored to the sense of human fellowship by the cry of an American woman attempting to climb into the high Italian cars: "O, do give me a boost!"